I have an app which needs to start an intent from a certain class (class X) which has a default constructor (if app starts from Service it automatically calls a constructor). Now I have to check if this constructor is called from Activity or Service. But I am not sure of such thing. Any ideas? If this question is already asked, I am sorry for the duplicate. I did not find any related question by searching here and google EDIT: I am sorry I was not clear, I want to check whether my code is called from Activity or Service. A: You could create a marker class, which contains the default constructor only, and from that class you can create a boolean flag, which you can use in the class X constructor. So for example your class X could look like this: public class ClassX { private boolean isFromService = false; public ClassX() { // Do stuff if(isFromService) { // Do stuff } else { // Do stuff } } } And you could make sure you call your class X constructor only when isFromService is false. Q: Parse JSON in C# & Visual Studio
