localization of parvalbumin-immunoreactive cells in the guinea pig cerebellar cortex. Parvalbumin-immunoreactive (PARV-IR) cells in the cerebellar cortex of the guinea pig were studied by immunohistochemical techniques. The distribution of

PARV-IR cells in relation to cytoarchitecture was investigated. This revealed a heterogeneous distribution of PARV-IR cells in the cerebellar cortex. In the granular layer and in the white matter of the cerebellar cortex PARV-IR cells were observed with a preferential distribution in the center and the periphery of the cortex, respectively. These cells were relatively small and their size distribution ranged from 10 to 25 microns. PARV-IR cells in the granular layer and in the white matter were small with cell bodies measuring 15 to 25 microns. A few PARV-IR cells in the granular layer were medium-sized with cell bodies measuring 25 to 40 microns in diameter. At the ultrastructural level PARV-IR cells in the granular c6a93da74d
