WASHINGTON — The San Francisco Police Department and other law enforcement officers in the Bay Area “work side-by-side” with the FBI, providing strategic information to the agency and its agents. A source within the FBI confirmed to SF Weekly that the organization has “a longstanding relationship with local and state law enforcement” and that “local law enforcement may be assisting the FBI with active or ongoing criminal investigations.” The source said SFPD is operating within the bounds of federal policy, which allows police to share information with the FBI. SFPD spokesperson Grace Gatchell defended the department’s relationship with the FBI, saying, “We have a long history of working closely with federal and state agencies, as it pertains to criminal investigation.” Gatchell said SFPD often makes its cooperating agency aware of police investigative requests that might match a particular agency’s operation. “We will often work with the FBI on the kidnapping of a child, for example. We will often advise the FBI about an investigation.” She added: “This has been in place for decades. We have a long-standing relationship with the FBI. The San Francisco Police Department is a proud member of the National Law Enforcement Automated Data System (NLEADS). In San Francisco, the (FBI) works side-by-side with local and state law enforcement. We work with the FBI to coordinate information and help solve crimes.” However, the FBI’s NLEADS database does not seem to capture information related to Missing Kids, a recent nonprofit campaign that has worked to raise public awareness about missing kids nationwide. NLEADS data, obtained by the Missing Kids campaign through an open records request, is far more comprehensive than the public data its nonprofit says it provides. The data shows that when the FBI was looking for a suspect in an investigation of a child abduction that occurred in San Francisco in 2018, its online NLEADS database showed that law enforcement were searching for a suspect in a similar kidnapping in San Francisco’s Richmond District. The FBI was looking for the suspect they believe committed the Richmond kidnapping after the suspect took the child from a house on Sunday, May 3, 2018. That suspect is being held without bail in a San Francisco County jail for four charges, including child endangerment c6a93da74d
