Community relationships are governed by the Niroo status. In 2018, Environment and Nature Protection Chief Robert Saxena ordered a temporary closure of all the Gibotsa community's access routes. The municipality is subject to ongoing environmental assessments, and says it has received a plan from the Ministry of Environmental Affairs and Development to allow limited access to Gibotsa for the next five years. The decision by Saxena, a member of the governing indigenous representative council, is supported by the Groot Binnendiep Niroo. However, the agency's chairman, Sista Oruba, says the group is worried that during Saxena's five-year tenure, the municipality will take additional steps that will prejudice the Niroo's ability to seek redress against such developments. Saxena and President Cyril Ramaphosa's employment of inexperienced lawyers for key positions in cabinet has led to accusations of nepotism. The Niroo says the best lawyer available should be hired for each assignment. "We are on the verge of losing our land and resources," said Ramaphosa. He was referring to government's moves to rework the country's constitution to guarantee an indigenous majority in parliament and to make treaty rights an active part of the national handbook.
