with some exceptions, shipments of articles on the ear are subject to the ear's classification and trade requirements. for goods classified by the eaea as eaf, the reexporter must certify in writing that the articles are not provided for by the ear. for goods that are not listed in the eaea list, and have no eaea list identifier, the exporter may use either the general u.s. tariff schedules or general harmonized system (ghs) rules of origin to certify that the articles are not provided for by the ear. if the articles are not provided for by the ear, then an ear number must be assigned, on a case-by-case basis. the ear provides that the importer may assign an ear number to an article that has a non-eaea list identifier and for which there is no eaea list identifier. however, a non-eaea article may not receive ear status under this provision unless it meets the requirements of the ear. in other words, the eaea lists do not contain a non-eaea list identifier and an article is not provided for by the ear. there are certain exceptions to this rule. for example, electronic items may be used to perform functions that are not provided for by the ear. some of these items are identified as ear-eaf, and can be reexported under license exception rpl with a statement certifying that the item is not provided for by the ear. to qualify for ear-eaf status, a product must be identified by the ear as a defense article and must be used as a replacement for a defense article. see the ear to itar document pairs above for details. the ear provides that it may be used to obtain ear-eaf status for any articles that are not provided for by the exceptions to this requirement. see the ear to itar document pairs above for details. the ear provides that an exporter may obtain ear status for an article if the item is subject to a license exception to the ear. a license exception is an exception to the ear that is in effect at the time of a transaction. a license exception may be a one-time license, an annual license, or a perpetual license. this license exception authorizes the export to any country, except iran, north korea, syria, or a transitional national party (tnp) country that is designated as a category i tnp country or a category ii tnp country in the ear (supplement no. 1 to part 774 of the ear). a list of tnp countries is published in supplement no. 1 to part 774 of the ear. the term "tnp" refers to a political party in a country that has
