while adobe flash player may have become a standard for web video, there are some notable limitations with it, including: flash plug-ins can only be installed on desktops or laptops. they cannot be installed on mobile devices or tablets. mobile devices cannot play flash video without a plug-in or plugin. ipads, iphones, and other mobile devices come with built-in flash video support, but if there is no flash version available for it, it will not play. flash video files are often bloated and require a lot of space. when web browsers can play video without flash, it does not require the flash files to be downloaded. video can be blocked by internet service providers, school districts, workplaces, and others. we can all agree that html5 is a great alternative to flash, but there are other tools that can be used in its place. some of the most popular tools include: dhtml - dynamic html, or javascript-based html. it is only supported in internet explorer. activex - a microsoft corporation program, it is a way to use flash technology on internet explorer. silverlight - a microsoft corporation program that is similar to activex, but it is available to all major browsers. it is not supported by internet explorer. silverlight for the mac - this is a macintosh program that works with silverlight. shockwave flash - adobe's primary flash player, it is available for all major web browsers. html5 video is being developed to solve these problems, and web browsers can easily support both. the core of html5 is pretty much the same as flash, but has a much cleaner and more efficient code base. video and audio can be handled independently, which means that it is possible for one part of the video to use flash while another uses html5. audio is a big part of html5, and it is the core of the html5 web application security model. video is also supported in html5, but it is not as developed as the audio portion.

our current recommendations are to keep using flash for now, until more reliable alternative options come along. there are some notable differences in where flash is supported on various browsers, but they do not matter much unless you are going to do some web development. if you are using firefox, chrome or other google-based browsers, you should set your browser setting to allow flash content to run from this website. click the help menu and select “search and reset” to reset the browser setting. flash player may remain on your system unless you uninstall it. uninstalling flash player will help secure your system since adobe will no longer issue flash player updates or security patches after the eol date. adobe blocked flash content from running in flash player beginning january 12, 2021 and the major browser vendors have disabled and will continue to disable flash player from running after the eol date. in the final moments of the cws february 24, 2020, episode of the flash, fans saw the return of caitlin snow (danielle panabaker), who lost her life on november 2, 2016, in the second crossover event, the flash war. the death of caitlin snow was a shocker, but also a huge relief to fans because it gave the opportunity to bring back danielle panabaker. blame it on caitlin, but danielle panabaker has been absent from the the flash for quite some time. since the events of the second crossover, fans have been wondering how team flash would be able to bring ronnie back to life. danielle panabaker took to twitter on april 16, 2019, to hint that she may return to the series in the future. »»»
