Pack Musica Vallenato 2013 WORK

Los muchachos decidieron no hacer la versión en español ya que no había muzica latina con la que se pudiera mezclar. Asi que no crearon la muzica, sino que remplazaron el latin con la misica electrnica y el vallenato. A great sense of rhythm, and the ability to drop in any musical style with complete ease, establishes Los Tipacos as America's premier Latin jazz band. Hailing from Detroit, Los Tipacos set their sights on touring internationally and landed gigs in Europe, Asia and South America. Their resume includes such legendary figures as Chucho Valdes and Tito Puente and this album fits in with their other projects perfectly. In an interview with reporters from Indy Week, the NASA crew members stated that they were drawn to the song by its familiarity. They also thought it helped them keep the spirit of Christmas alive in the small confines of the spacecraft. They were right. As the Gemini 6 crew were opening the hatch of the capsule to enter the space, there was a moment of indecision, "...the question was, "Will they or won't they?" and if they got in, what would they do?" said Edwin Harrison, the other scientist on board. Back on earth, NASA prepared all the astronauts involved for the mission and one of the questions they were asked was what would be the first song played in space. Fleming told reporters that the guys were trying to come up with some sort of theme song and in response, the astronaut behind him (Edwin Harrison) stood up and said "let's play Christmas music". Within an instant, the song, Jingle Bells, was on and the NASA team, relieved, burst into song. This recording is one of the most important pieces of evidence for the development of musical influences by man beyond the planet. It also shows how commercialism and media outlets can play important roles in the development of music, a pattern that was later amplified by the creation of the internet.

Pack Musica Vallenato 2013

The art of "character design" -- in other words, what's most compelling in terms of musical representation -- is very personal, and I've made a lot of records that speak to me specifically. A good example is Uncommon Type, which I've performed in four different venues and which is based on a piece for organ and tape by Italian composer Luciano Berio called "In Vivo". The piece is about falling asleep at night and awakening in the next morning, and this record is a love letter to those evenings I'd spend as a child taking turns lying on the couch with my mom and her assorted girlfriends, falling asleep and waking in the morning with the smells of coffee and laughter, while music played throughout the house. When I realized I'd have to perform this piece in a couple of months, I was excited; so I figured that a 35-minute-long dream-like, pop-infused electronic score would be exactly what was needed. This was the first time I had to make a cover for my songs, and it was challenging because the piece doesn't actually have lyrics. There was a character to give the composition a voice, and if I found one that felt right, I would have something to work with. I spent months searching for the right person, and eventually we came up with an illustrator named Valentino Pirino. It was really a collaboration in the true sense of the word. He brought a lot of ideas to the project. The cover was to be a collage of photos I took over the years, and he suggested using photos of sunsets and other shots with strong lines, which made me think about the fact that one day this record would be played in space, 5ec8ef588b
