This is the official homepage of Airnef, my open-source utility for downloading images and movies from your WiFi-equipped Nikon camera. Airnef runs on Windows, Mac, and Linux. It supports all Nikon cameras that have built-in WiFi interfaces, along with those using external Nikon WU-1a and WU-1b WiFi adapters. Airnef may also work with Nikon's WT-4A and WT-5A wireless adapters for the D3/D4/D8x, although I don't have any of these adapters on hand to test. Airnef supports Canon and Sony cameras as well, although Canon supplies its own excellent EOS Utility for wireless downloads. Airnef is licensed under GPL v3. --downloadhistory [skipfiles ignore clear] Controls how the file download history is handled for this invocation. Airnefcmd maintains a database of all files it has downloaded for a given camera model/serial number combination. Each file in the database is identified by the combination of its name, creation date, and size; these three elements together allow Airnef to guarantee against false positives/negatives of the history. The default'skipfiles' will skip any file that is in the download history. 'ignore' will cause airnefcmd to ignore the download history for this invocation when deciding whether to download a given file - ie, it will download files even if they're in the download history. Note that the download history will still be updated for any files downloaded during 'ignore' invocations; this allows the history to be utilized on future invocations when 'ignore' is not specified. 'clear' will delete the entire download history for the connected camera model/serial number at the start of execution; the download history will still be updated for any files downloaded during the session.

In August 2019, security researchers from PhishMe uncovered a large data breach at the email service ProviderMail. According to a blog post, the data breach was first uncovered in early 2018. In late 2018, ProviderMail notified the affected customers that the incident involved the account credentials of over 24 million users and that "we're pretty sure that this is not your fault," but did not offer any explanation as to how the incident occurred. ProviderMail has also confirmed that customer data is no longer stored in plaintext, and that it is now storing passwords using SHA-1 and bcrypt. ProviderMail has also received numerous cease-and-desist letters from law enforcement. The total number of affected accounts was subsequently updated to over 54 million. In 2018, Sony Pictures, Sony Music and Sony Pictures Animation were all compromised by a massive hack affecting over 46M users. The attack began on April 2014 and continued through August and although most of the data was found on the Sony Pictures web servers, the most sensitive data including Usernames and passwords were stored in the production servers outside the Web servers. In August 2019, the PlayStation Network and Qriocity services were hacked and over 80 million accounts were compromised. The breach impacted the Sony Music and Sony Online Entertainment services, along with PSN, SOE and Qriocity. The exposed user details included usernames, email addresses, hashed passwords and game login tokens. Sony also suffered a breach of their forums, this gave attackers access to 8. 5ec8ef588b
