Heterogeneity of gestational trophoblastic disease (GTD) occurs, requiring subclassification in terms of morphologic and clinical characteristics. This study evaluated molecular alterations in GTD to define genetic profiles that may help predict the clinical behavior of individual tumors. The study included 44 invasive moles (60% choriocarcinomas, 35% placental site trophoblastic tumors), 31 gestational choriocarcinomas (88% hydatidiform moles), 16 choriocarcinomas associated with molar pregnancy and 16 placental site trophoblastic tumors. All samples were analyzed for allelic imbalances by a series of comparative genomic hybridization (CGH) on DNA from tumors and their corresponding gestational sites. Genetic imbalances in GTD were more frequent in tumors derived from molar tissues (5.3%) compared with those 79a2804d6b
