A multidisciplinary framework for urinary tract infections. Urinary tract infections (UTIs) account for at least $3 billion annually in healthcare costs, yet they are among the most common and easily treatable conditions encountered by physicians. Understanding the pathogenesis and treatment of UTIs can be challenging because of the existence of a complex interplay between the uropathogens and the host. To provide guidance to clinicians regarding the treatment of UTIs, a team of health care experts developed a multidisciplinary framework of UTIs, integrating the current knowledge regarding UTIs, their pathogenesis, epidemiology, clinical presentation, antimicrobial susceptibility, and management. UTIs represent one of the most common presentations in primary care settings, and this framework provides health care practitioners with a means to understand and treat patients with UTIs. Differential expression of phospholipase Cbeta3 and phospholipase Cbeta4 in rat hippocampus. The present study has examined the relative expression of phospholipase Cbeta3 (PLCbeta3) and PLCbeta4 in rat hippocampus. Subcellular distribution and colocalization of PLCbeta3 and PLCbeta4 was also studied. The highest PLCbeta3 expression was found in the dentate gyrus. Enzyme expression was also noted in the olfactory bulb, septum and other regions. PLCbeta3 expression was observed in all cell types, including glial cells. The subcellular distribution of PLCbeta3 showed a predominant localization of the enzyme in the dendritic spines. Coexpression of PLCbeta3 and PLCbeta4 in the same cells was also observed. Intensity of PLCbeta3 staining was greater than PLCbeta4 staining. No significant difference in enzyme expression was found between hippocampal regions. There were no apparent abnormalities in the morphology or distribution of PLCbeta3 and PLCbeta4 in the hippocampus of transgenic
