Lightroom 5 is a complete change from the previous versions, and not only does it make the interface a lot more streamlined, it also introduces a feature that will be long-lasting. This is the new 'Smart Previews' feature. With the new moment previews, you will have the ability to preview your images without using the normal viewfinder. This may be a useful feature for those who should not use the viewfinder every time they wish to work on an image. Instead, they want to be able to 'preview' their image by simply clicking on the screen without needing to use the viewfinder. The real test comes when we look at the other features which Lightroom 5 brings, and make sure that they have been worth it. That's when you need to take a step back and shine the hard light on the software. The new '...Smart Previews' are an extremely useful feature which change the way you preview images. They work out of the viewfinder and display the images in a new layered manner. This smart preview feature looks a lot more like a Lightroom 4 view. More importantly, because the preview is in a layered manner, you can easily remove or replace a part of any image without losing the original data. In the past, removing a part of an image meant permanently losing it. This is because the entire block of data had to be downloaded from the current point. Other views were completely different; each of them had a selection overlay that worked a bit like Photoshop's smart layer in that it was made out of a selection. However, if you needed to replace a section of data with the PSD, you had to download it again from the current point.
