Periocular capillary hemangioma (PCH) is a rare condition, and its treatment can be challenging. We report a case of PCH successfully treated with submucous lacrimal endarterial puncture using a digital subtraction angiogram (DSA). A 12-year-old girl had a swelling of her lower left eyelid that was gradually increasing in size and associated with occasional minor pain. She had Down syndrome, and PCH was suspected. The patient underwent submucous lacrimal endarterial puncture. The PCH regressed, and the patient's complaints resolved. She received a follow-up examination 7 months later and had no active swelling. Submucous lacrimal endarterial puncture is a safe, non-invasive, and effective treatment for periocular capillary hemangiomas in children. // // Generated by class-dump 3.5 (64 bit). // // class-dump is Copyright (C) 1997-1998, 2000-2001, 2004-2013 by Steve Nygard. // #import "NSObject.h" #import "NSCoding.h" @class NSString; @interface BannerContent : NSObject { NSString *_bannerText; int _bannerType; } @property(nonatomic) int bannerType; // @synthesize bannerType=_bannerType; @property(readonly, nonatomic) NSString *_bannerText; // @synthesize bannerText=_bannerText; - (void).cxx_
