edit: I used to work in a studio where we had a disorganized file system. The area we found to be most challenging was attempting to find the 5 and 7 minute video files. They were all deemed NOT to be shot on the 7 hour video disc. The current version of this app is so useful that I don't worry about this any more. I used to refer to the "file system in the sky" when looking for the files. That reference to the cloud file system is no longer relevant. I use this app daily and am happy to see the new features and improvements made. The new overlay tool and styles are great enhancements. The new addition of layer blending mode and users can now group layers by clicking on the layers tab. The image preview is especially useful and I think this is one of the smallest apps that can provide this function. The core of Lightroom 5 is the same as previous versions when it comes to core editing functions. However, a lot of the editing performance improvements are courtesy of the company's new Lightroom Mobile Plus app. Lightroom Mobile is a free editing app that's optimized for smaller screen tablets like iPad, though it also can run on smartphones with the Adobe Camera Raw app installed.

The app specializes in editing RAW images in a lightweight and efficient manner. Image adjustments are available at the same time you tap to crop a live photo. Using Lightroom Mobile also encourages you to keep all your favorite adjustments in one place, making it easy to tweak them and apply them to other images.
